On September 11, 2006, an unofficial Linux port was released by the user JeeGee using Wine to run under Linux using Remote Desktop Connection, thus allowing Windows applications to be used on Linux computers without hardware compatibility issues.

On May 26, 2007, Abbyy Digital released the source code of the Windows version of Faxcapture for download through their website at <http://www.abbysoft.com>. This was done in response to widespread issues with the earlier Windows version, including software piracy and crashes. On June 4, 2007, Abbyy Soft released the open-source version of Faxcapture 1.0.1 under the GNU General Public License (GPL) to address these issues; however, it is still not available for download on their website due to patent claims against the source code by Fujitsu General Products Co., Ltd ("Fujitsu"). On March 18, 2008, Abbyy Digital opened software development for release of Faxcapture 2 under different open-source licenses; however this project has yet to see development beyond a few screenshots posted on their website (see release).
